2.2 – Empathy Map Canvas

The Empathy Map Dashboard facilitates an analysis of consumer behavior in order to better understand the preferences, feelings, and buying habits of individuals who purchase beauty products. The goal of the dashboard is to provide cosmetic companies with the tools they need to determine the requirements of consumers as well as current trends in cosmetic products via data visualization tools such as Tableau.

- a) Who (Target Audience): The makeup lovers and beauty fanatics that will use the dashboard primarily include Generation Z and millennials who are active shoppers online and are plugged into beauty trends. However, the dashboard will also take into consideration the skin care consumer, as well as the brands studying their customer's preferences.
- b) What They Need: Consumers want to learn about new, trending beauty products; discover a variety of products that meet their individual skin needs; compare brands before deciding to buy; and stay current on where beauty trends are going. Affordability and trustworthiness of the products are also considerations.
- c) What They See: Beauty consumers are often influenced through social media channels (such as Instagram and TikTok) that allow the rapid sharing of trending beauty products. They also become aware of product launches, celebrity beauty routines, advertisements through influencers, deal on product and online reviews for a product.

- d) What They Say: Some of the concerns beauty consumers have include wanting to find makeup products that match their skin tones, choosing skin care products that will ultimately give them results, trusting reviews that are not influenced by ads, and finding products that provide a good value for their money.
- e) What They Do: Prior to making a purchase, beauty consumers generally will watch makeup tutorial videos, compare pricing of beauty products online, read customer reviews of beauty products, and follow beauty influencers. They will also purchase beauty products during a promotional sale event.
- f) What They Hear: Consumers are influenced to buy beauty products from recommendations from friends and family, beauty influencers, skin care experts, bloggers in online communities, and discussions going on in social media about beauty products.
- g) What do you want to think and feel?
- h) Frustrated when there are too many options and confusing choices, feeling frustrated from many of the products they test not helping their skin due to it being sensitive, believing that some products may not be effective for sensitive skin, and frustrated with the cost of many products not being worth it.

Expectations are to have products that are safe and will work effectively; that have been recommended specifically to them; and to have access to good honest reviews; to have access to trendy products that are not too expensive; and to feel confident in what you buy for your beauty needs.

Key Influencers

Consumers' decisions are primarily based on the recommendations of friends, other members of their community, beauty influencers that they follow on social media, celebrities (via endorsements), and viewing YouTube videos that show how to use products.

Emotional Journey

The customer starts their journey of discovering a new product and continues with the process of exploring alternative products, comparing brands, making a final purchase decision, using the product, and then continuing to purchase the product because of brand loyalty.
